R.E.A.D. to a Dog Returns

Sometimes kids feel nervous about reading, not because they can't, but because they feel self-conscious. Reading aloud can feel stressful when they worry about making mistakes.

Sitting with a gentle therapy dog over a 6-week session helps them relax, giving them a safe, non-judgmental space to practice. Little by little, confidence grows, reading becomes easier, and the experience starts to feel enjoyable. Check your favorite neighborhood branch for availability.

Stitch Together

A weekly gathering for creativity, connection and community.

Meeting new people can be nerve-wracking at first. But that's why library events such as Stitch Together aim to create an easy way to meet new people with matching interests.

Stitch Together is a library program held every Thursday from 6:00 to 7:30 p.m. at Walt Branch's Collaborative Learning Lab. It is aimed at creating a welcoming space for those who share a love of all things crafty and crochet. All skill levels are welcome.

Many of the participants shared how they first visited Stitch Together looking for friends or a sense of community after moving to Lincoln for the first time. They were happy to find a small community that enjoyed the same interests they did and a cozy space to talk about their craft. Whether it was receiving guidance, trying new things or simply working beside other crafters, Stitch Together offered a place for that.

The versatility of a program such as this allows new crafters, new Lincoln residents and expert crafters alike to find their place.

Elizabeth Claymon, one of Stitch Together's leaders, put it best: "Library programs exist to help foster a community," she said. "Stitch Together is a community built on creativity. Some come here to focus on a project in a relaxed environment. Others have questions or want feedback about their projects. And others are here for the friends they've met and to unwind after a hard day. And that's really something special."
